

Jordan Lowe is a partner who concentrates his practice in the areas of coverage litigation, commercial litigation, and reinsurance. His practice includes providing litigation and pre-litigation counsel to insurance carriers and reinsurers on complex coverage issues. Jordan serves on the firm's PFAS team and has developed an expertise in advising insurance clients on the management and evaluation of this emerging risk. In addition to litigating the nation's first wave of coverage disputes involving "forever chemicals," Jordan advises insurance and reinsurance clients on underwriting issues relative to PFAS.

Jordan has also represented insurance and reinsurance clients in coverage disputes involving mass shootings, concussion-related injury class actions, multi-district litigation, civil rights claims, long-tail environmental and health hazard claims, construction defect matters, negligent security claims, and public entity insurance disputes. Jordan also defends first-party and third-party insurers against bad faith claims. His practice spans well beyond Illinois, having appeared in courts and tribunals in over 20 states.

Since 2020, Jordan has been selected annually to the Illinois Rising Stars list, a peer review designation recognizing no more than 2.5 percent of Illinois lawyers under the age of 40.
